ABSTRACT

Method and apparatus are disclosed for moving logical data entities from one storage element to another storage element in a computer storage system, when more than one user or host computer may access the logical entity. According to one embodiment of the method, all

5   of the read requests for the logical entity are moved to a new copy of the logical entity, before writes for logical entity are moved to the new copy.